Before combustion engines, people used steam engines to move trains and boats. The steam engine was the most important invention of the Industrial Revolution. It was the energy behind the most advanced textile inventions. Have you ever watched a kettle boiling water? You probably noticed lots of steam coming out of the kettle. Watching a kettle can help you understand how a steam engine works.

The steam engine helped to power the Industrial Revolution. Before steam power, factories and mills were powered by water, wind, horse, or man. Water was a good source of power, but factories had to be located near a river. Both water and wind power could be unreliable as sometimes rivers could dry up during a drought or freeze during the winter and wind didn't always blow. Steam power allowed factories to be located anywhere. It also provided reliable power and could be used to power large machines.

Throughout the 1800s, steam engines were improved. They became smaller and more efficient. Large steam engines were used in factories and mills to power machines of all types. Smaller steam engines were used in transportation including trains and steamboats.

23. The most important invention of the Industrial Revolution was the steam engine.

24. Watching a kettle boiling can help you understand better and work harder.

25. Steam power not only allowed factories to be located anywhere, but provided reliable power as well.
26. Steam engines became smaller so as to be used in factories and mills.
27. What does the word “power” in paragraph 2 mean?
 A. give energy B. electrify C. hold power D. move something quickly
28. According to the passage, combustion engines...
 A. were invented before steam engines.
 B. were invented after steam engines.
 C. are much stronger than steam engines.
