Read the following passage about Gender Discrimination in the Workplace and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions (1.0 pt.)

Gender discrimination continues to be a significant issue in many workplaces worldwide. In many industries, women still face challenges that prevent them from achieving the same career opportunities as their male counterparts. Studies show that women earn less than men for doing the same job, and they are less likely to be promoted to leadership roles. In fact, in countries like the United States, women earn about 80 cents for every dollar a man makes.

Unfortunately, gender discrimination does not only affect salaries and promotions but also impacts how women are treated in the workplace. For example, many women experience "gender bias," where their skills and ideas are undervalued or overlooked because of their gender. Women in male-dominated fields, such as engineering and technology, often struggle to gain the same recognition and opportunities as men, even when they are equally qualified.

However, there are efforts to reduce gender discrimination. Many companies are introducing diversity and inclusion programs aimed at creating equal opportunities for all employees, regardless of gender. Some countries have implemented laws that require companies to ensure gender equality in hiring, pay, and promotions. These laws are helping to promote gender equality, although progress has been slow.

Technology also plays an important role in combating gender discrimination. Social media platforms provide a space for women to share their experiences and raise awareness about gender inequality. Additionally, apps and websites that offer career advice and mentorship can help women navigate gender biases in their careers and create support networks.
