Read the passage and choose the correct answer to each of the following questions.

Culture shock is a significant experience that many individuals encounter when they move to a new country or region. It describes the feelings of confusion, anxiety, and disorientation that can arise when someone is exposed to unfamiliar customs, languages, and social norms. Initially, many people may feel excited about their new surroundings, but as time goes on, they may begin to feel overwhelmed by the differences.

For instance, someone moving from a small town to a bustling city may struggle with the fast pace of life, crowded spaces, and the absence of familiar faces. They might miss the sense of community and comfort that their previous environment provided, which can lead to feelings of isolation. This emotional response is normal; however, it is essential to recognize and address these feelings to adapt successfully.

Coping with culture shock requires both patience and openness. Actively engaging with the new culture is a helpful strategy. This can include participating in local events, trying new foods, and making an effort to meet new people. Building relationships with locals and other newcomers can create a support network that eases the transition.

Additionally, it is beneficial to educate oneself about the new culture before and during the move. Understanding customs, traditions, and language can reduce misunderstandings and foster a sense of belonging. In conclusion, culture shock is a natural part of adapting to a new environment. By acknowledging this experience and actively seeking ways to connect with the new culture, individuals can embrace the richness of diverse experiences and ultimately thrive in their new surroundings.
