Edward Patrick Eagan was born on April 26th 1897 in Denver, Colorado, and his father died in a railroad accident when Eagan was only one year old. He and his four brothers were raised by his mother, who earned a small income from teaching foreign languages.

Inspired by Frank Marriwell, the hero of a series of popular novels for boys, Eagan pursued an education for himself and an interest in boxing. He attended the University of Denver for a year before serving in the U.S. army as an artillery lieutenant during World War I. After the war, he entered Yale University and while studying there, won the US national amateur heavyweight boxing title. He graduated from Yale in 1921, attended Harvard Law School, and received a Rhodes scholarship to the University of Oxford where he received his A.M. in 1928.

While studying at Oxford, Eagan became the first American to win the British amateur boxing championship. Eagan won his first gold medal as a light heavyweight boxer at the 1920 Olympic Games in Antwerp, Belgium. Eagan also fought at the 1924 Olympics in Paris as a heavyweight but failed to get a medal. Though he had taken up the sport just three weeks before the competition, he managed to win a second gold medal as a member of four-man bobsled team at the 1932 Olympics in Lake Placid, New York. Thus, he became the only athlete to win gold medals at both the Summer and Winter Olympics.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the following questions.

Fortunately, we live in a city in which our waste management system includes a kerbside recycling program. But only certain types of plastic (numbered 1, 2 or 5) can be recycled. Globally, only 9% of the 15% of plastic waste collected for recycling is actually recycled. We should be encouraging children to discuss the ways in which recycling is a complicated and, at best, partial solution to plastic pollution.

Litterless lunchbox efforts are increasingly common in schools. Such initiatives can help raise children's awareness of plastic waste. However, they can easily become a top-down school policy rather than an opportunity for children to deliberate about the ethical and political complexities of plastic waste. They can also create conditions through which children may be shamed or singled out for bringing plastic wrapping to school, including disabled children, or children with disabled caregivers, whose well-being depends on their use of some single-use plastics. While social shaming has been used in environmental behavior modification, it's not great as an educational tool. Children and youth can feel disempowered when solutions to environmental problems are just outside their reach, or just don't add up. Many people believe that children are able to grasp the importance of prevention of plastic waste over trying to find solutions after it has been produced and used.

Packaging accounts for 46% of the world's plastic waste. Currently, some of the world's top single-use plastic polluters are the same corporations who led the "people as polluters" deflection campaign decades ago. Under public pressure, one of the worst producers of single-use plastic, Coca-Cola, recently pledged to transition 25% of its packaging to reusable packaging by 2030. This is a beginning, but rather than wait for corporations to do the right thing, we can work to build reusable and refillable packaging infrastructure and demand that polluters pay.

Children can learn that holding corporations responsible and demanding regulatory change can have an impact. Let's commit to helping children collaborate with communities and organizations working to make a difference to reduce plastic pollution at the source.

In the end, children and educators feel empowered when they are active participants within intergenerational communities organizing for change - rather than being made to feel they are the problem.

- A. judged
- B. separated

- A. They contribute to making children less aware of plastic waste.
- B. They may result in social shaming for those who bring plastic wrapping to school.
- C. They lead to ethical and political complexities of plastic waste.
- D. They are inessential for environmental behavior modification.

Question 38. The word "pledged" in paragraph 3 is closest in meaning to _____.

- A. neglected
- B. committed
- C. abandoned
- D. contributed

Question 39. Which of the following is NOT true according to the passage?

- A. Requiring regulatory changes from corporations can help to decrease plastic waste.
- B. Packaging takes up nearly a half of the world's plastic waste.
- C. Not all plastic waste collected for recycling is actually recycled.
- D. Coca-Cola has already transitioned 25% of its packaging to reusable packaging.

Question 40. Which of the following can be inferred from the passage?

- A. Prevention of plastic waste is more important than finding solutions after plastic is produced and used.

- C. Waiting for corporations to take action is not the best approach to addressing plastic pollution.

However, they can easily become a top-down school policy rather than an opportunity for children to deliberate about the ethical and political complexities of plastic waste. They can also create conditions through which children may be shamed or singled out for bringing plastic wrapping to school, including disabled children, or children with disabled caregivers, whose well-being depends on their use of some single-use plastics. While social shaming has been used in environmental behavior modification, it's not great as an educational tool. Children and youth can feel disempowered when solutions to environmental problems are just outside their reach, or just don't add up. Many people believe that children are able to grasp the importance of prevention of plastic waste over trying to find solutions after it has been produced and used.

Packaging accounts for 46% of the world's plastic waste. Currently, some of the world's top single-use plastic polluters are the same corporations who led the "people as polluters" deflection campaign decades ago. Under public pressure, one of the worst producers of single-use plastic, Coca-Cola, recently pledged to transition 25% of its packaging to reusable packaging by 2030. This is a beginning, but rather than wait for corporations to do the right thing, we can work to build reusable and refillable packaging infrastructure and demand that polluters pay.

Children can learn that holding corporations responsible and demanding regulatory change can have an impact. Let's commit to helping children collaborate with communities and organizations working to make a difference to reduce plastic pollution at the source.

In the end, children and educators feel empowered when they are active participants within intergenerational communities organizing for change - rather than being made to feel they are the problem.
