People may think that food choice is only important for keeping a healthy weight. However, the way we eat and the food choices we make every day also have a big impact on the environment.

Food production is a major contributor (21) _____ climate change. The process of growing, manufacturing, and transporting food, especially meat and dairy products, involves the use of fossil fuels. We all know that burning fossil fuels releases a huge amount of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere. All the ingredients for our meals require land, water, and energy to produce, so the food we choose can either increase or decrease our carbon footprint. (22) _____, transporting food over long distances can create more greenhouse gas emissions.

So what should we do? We should start by eating local and organic food. This can not only limit the amount of carbon dioxide (23) _____ during transportation, but can also help us avoid pesticides that are harmful to both humans and the environment. We should also choose a healthier diet with less animal-based food and more vegetables. Raising livestock for food requires huge amounts of water and grain, and can cause (24) _____ and pollution. Cows and sheep release methane as they digest plants and grass. Although it is shorter lived than carbon dioxide, methane is a lot more powerful than carbon dioxide at warming the Earth.

That is (25) _____ we should try to eat less red meat and dairy products. Making responsible food choices will not only improve our health and well-being, but will also have a positive impact on the environment.

PART 2: Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions (from 26 to 30).

Over the past few decades, Vietnam has experienced rapid urbanization, transforming from a primarily rural society into one with bustling cities and towns. This urbanization process has brought about significant positive and negative changes. On the positive side, urbanization has led to economic growth, improved infrastructure, and better access to education and healthcare. Many people have moved to urban areas for better job opportunities and a higher standard of living. Cities like Hanoi and Ho Chi Minh City have become economic hubs, attracting both local and foreign investments.

However, the rapid pace of urbanization has also posed several challenges. The influx of people into cities has put immense pressure on housing, leading to overcrowded neighborhoods and inadequate living conditions for many. Additionally, population density has increased the demand for public services such as transportation, waste management, and healthcare. Unfortunately, the infrastructure in many cities has not kept up with this growth, resulting in traffic congestion, pollution, and a decline in the quality of life for urban residents.

Another issue is the loss of agricultural land due to the expansion of urban areas. As cities grow, they encroach on farmland, reducing the amount of land available for agriculture. This has significant implications for food security and the livelihoods of those who depend on farming. Moreover, the shift from rural to urban living has altered social structures, with many people experiencing a loss of community and traditional values. Young generations, in particular, often feel disconnected from their rural roots.

In conclusion, while urbanization has undoubtedly contributed to Vietnam's development, it has also brought challenges that need to be addressed to ensure sustainable growth in the future. Policymakers will need to balance economic progress with environmental protection and social well-being.
