Today, most people continue reading on a regular basis; however, their reading habits have changed. Many people are reading their favourite newspapers and magazines on their electronic devices such as computers, laptops, and smartphones. This has both benefits and drawbacks.

Printed and digital media can both have the same content, but digital media is usually faster and easier to access. In fact, the number of people buying a daily newspaper or magazine at stores has decreased dramatically. With the help of the Internet, readers can now access information that is updated instantly and receive the latest news from every corner of the world. In addition, electronic media doesn't use paper and is considered more environmentally friendly. Reading news online is generally free of charge, and can be done anytime and anywhere. Many news websites provide video reports or multimedia stories, so people can choose to hear, watch, or read news according to their preferences.

However, readers may face some problems as they read newspapers online. For example, an Internet user may be forced to watch or read all kinds of advertisements before getting to the piece of news he or she is interested in. Online adverts can be very distracting and annoying, and can make readers lose interest in what they are reading. In addition, many online publications focus much more on attracting viewers and followers rather than providing detailed or accurate information.

Nevertheless, digital media is an incredible source of news, information and knowledge, and its benefits outweigh the disadvantages.

Traditional media such as printed newspapers and magazines has gradually declined in popularity, and digital media is attracting more and more users, and taking on a dominant role. Today, most people continue reading on a regular basis; however, their reading habits have changed. Many people are reading their favourite newspapers and magazines on their electronic devices such as computers, laptops, and smartphones. This has both benefits and drawbacks.

Printed and digital media can both have the same content, but digital media is usually faster and easier to access. In fact, the number of people buying a daily newspaper or magazine at stores has decreased dramatically. With the help of the Internet, readers can now access information that is updated instantly and receive the latest news from every corner of the world. In addition, electronic media doesn't use paper and is considered more environmentally friendly. Reading news online is generally free of charge, and can be done anytime and anywhere. Many news websites provide video reports or multimedia stories, so people can choose to hear, watch, or read news according to their preferences.

However, readers may face some problems as they read newspapers online. For example, an Internet user may be forced to watch or read all kinds of advertisements before getting to the piece of news he or she is interested in. Online adverts can be very distracting and annoying, and can make readers lose interest in what they are reading. In addition, many online publications focus much more on attracting viewers and followers rather than providing detailed or accurate information.

Nevertheless, digital media is an incredible source of news, information and knowledge, and its benefits outweigh the disadvantages.

Traditional media such as printed newspapers and magazines has gradually declined in popularity, and digital media is attracting more and more users, and taking on a dominant role. Today, most people continue reading on a regular basis; however, their reading habits have changed. Many people are reading their favourite newspapers and magazines on their electronic devices such as computers, laptops, and smartphones. This has both benefits and drawbacks.

Printed and digital media can both have the same content, but digital media is usually faster and easier to access. In fact, the number of people buying a daily newspaper or magazine at stores has decreased dramatically. With the help of the Internet, readers can now access information that is updated instantly and receive the latest news from every corner of the world. In addition, electronic media doesn't use paper and is considered more environmentally friendly. Reading news online is generally free of charge, and can be done anytime and anywhere. Many news websites provide video reports or multimedia stories, so people can choose to hear, watch, or read news according to their preferences.

However, readers may face some problems as they read newspapers online. For example, an Internet user may be forced to watch or read all kinds of advertisements before getting to the piece of news he or she is interested in. Online adverts can be very distracting and annoying, and can make readers lose interest in what they are reading. In addition, many online publications focus much more on attracting viewers and followers rather than providing detailed or accurate information.

Nevertheless, digital media is an incredible source of news, information and knowledge, and its benefits outweigh the disadvantages.

Traditional media such as printed newspapers and magazines has gradually declined in popularity, and digital media is attracting more and more users, and taking on a dominant role. Today, most people continue reading on a regular basis; however, their reading habits have changed. Many people are reading their favourite newspapers and magazines on their electronic devices such as computers, laptops, and smartphones. This has both benefits and drawbacks.

Printed and digital media can both have the same content, but digital media is usually faster and easier to access. In fact, the number of people buying a daily newspaper or magazine at stores has decreased dramatically. With the help of the Internet, readers can now access information that is updated instantly and receive the latest news from every corner of the world. In addition, electronic media doesn't use paper and is considered more environmentally friendly. Reading news online is generally free of charge, and can be done anytime and anywhere. Many news websites provide video reports or multimedia stories, so people can choose to hear, watch, or read news according to their preferences.

However, readers may face some problems as they read newspapers online. For example, an Internet user may be forced to watch or read all kinds of advertisements before getting to the piece of news he or she is interested in. Online adverts can be very distracting and annoying, and can make readers lose interest in what they are reading. In addition, many online publications focus much more on attracting viewers and followers rather than providing detailed or accurate information.

Nevertheless, digital media is an incredible source of news, information and knowledge, and its benefits outweigh the disadvantages.

PART 2: Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from 29 to 32.

Traditional media such as printed newspapers and magazines has gradually declined in popularity, and digital media is attracting more and more users, and taking on a dominant role. Today, most people continue reading on a regular basis; however, their reading habits have changed. Many people are reading their favourite newspapers and magazines on their electronic devices such as computers, laptops, and smartphones. This has both benefits and drawbacks.

Printed and digital media can both have the same content, but digital media is usually faster and easier to access. In fact, the number of people buying a daily newspaper or magazine at stores has decreased dramatically. With the help of the Internet, readers can now access information that is updated instantly and receive the latest news from every corner of the world. In addition, electronic media doesn't use paper and is considered more environmentally friendly. Reading news online is generally free of charge, and can be done anytime and anywhere. Many news websites provide video reports or multimedia stories, so people can choose to hear, watch, or read news according to their preferences.

However, readers may face some problems as they read newspapers online. For example, an Internet user may be forced to watch or read all kinds of advertisements before getting to the piece of news he or she is interested in. Online adverts can be very distracting and annoying, and can make readers lose interest in what they are reading. In addition, many online publications focus much more on attracting viewers and followers rather than providing detailed or accurate information.

Nevertheless, digital media is an incredible source of news, information and knowledge, and its benefits outweigh the disadvantages.

PART 2: Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from 29 to 32.

Traditional media such as printed newspapers and magazines has gradually declined in popularity, and digital media is attracting more and more users, and taking on a dominant role. Today, most people continue reading on a regular basis; however, their reading habits have changed. Many people are reading their favourite newspapers and magazines on their electronic devices such as computers, laptops, and smartphones. This has both benefits and drawbacks.

Printed and digital media can both have the same content, but digital media is usually faster and easier to access. In fact, the number of people buying a daily newspaper or magazine at stores has decreased dramatically. With the help of the Internet, readers can now access information that is updated instantly and receive the latest news from every corner of the world. In addition, electronic media doesn't use paper and is considered more environmentally friendly. Reading news online is generally free of charge, and can be done anytime and anywhere. Many news websites provide video reports or multimedia stories, so people can choose to hear, watch, or read news according to their preferences.

However, readers may face some problems as they read newspapers online. For example, an Internet user may be forced to watch or read all kinds of advertisements before getting to the piece of news he or she is interested in. Online adverts can be very distracting and annoying, and can make readers lose interest in what they are reading. In addition, many online publications focus much more on attracting viewers and followers rather than providing detailed or accurate information.

Nevertheless, digital media is an incredible source of news, information and knowledge, and its benefits outweigh the disadvantages.

Traditional media such as printed newspapers and magazines has gradually declined in popularity, and digital media is attracting more and more users, and taking on a dominant role. Today, most people continue reading on a regular basis; however, their reading habits have changed. Many people are reading their favourite newspapers and magazines on their electronic devices such as computers, laptops, and smartphones. This has both benefits and drawbacks.

Printed and digital media can both have the same content, but digital media is usually faster and easier to access. In fact, the number of people buying a daily newspaper or magazine at stores has decreased dramatically. With the help of the Internet, readers can now access information that is updated instantly and receive the latest news from every corner of the world. In addition, electronic media doesn't use paper and is considered more environmentally friendly. Reading news online is generally free of charge, and can be done anytime and anywhere. Many news websites provide video reports or multimedia stories, so people can choose to hear, watch, or read news according to their preferences.

However, readers may face some problems as they read newspapers online. For example, an Internet user may be forced to watch or read all kinds of advertisements before getting to the piece of news he or she is interested in. Online adverts can be very distracting and annoying, and can make readers lose interest in what they are reading. In addition, many online publications focus much more on attracting viewers and followers rather than providing detailed or accurate information.

Nevertheless, digital media is an incredible source of news, information and knowledge, and its benefits outweigh the disadvantages.

PART 2: Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from 29 to 32.

Traditional media such as printed newspapers and magazines has gradually declined in popularity, and digital media is attracting more and more users, and taking on a dominant role. Today, most people continue reading on a regular basis; however, their reading habits have changed. Many people are reading their favourite newspapers and magazines on their electronic devices such as computers, laptops, and smartphones. This has both benefits and drawbacks.

Printed and digital media can both have the same content, but digital media is usually faster and easier to access. In fact, the number of people buying a daily newspaper or magazine at stores has decreased dramatically. With the help of the Internet, readers can now access information that is updated instantly and receive the latest news from every corner of the world. In addition, electronic media doesn't use paper and is considered more environmentally friendly. Reading news online is generally free of charge, and can be done anytime and anywhere. Many news websites provide video reports or multimedia stories, so people can choose to hear, watch, or read news according to their preferences.

However, readers may face some problems as they read newspapers online. For example, an Internet user may be forced to watch or read all kinds of advertisements before getting to the piece of news he or she is interested in. Online adverts can be very distracting and annoying, and can make readers lose interest in what they are reading. In addition, many online publications focus much more on attracting viewers and followers rather than providing detailed or accurate information.

Nevertheless, digital media is an incredible source of news, information and knowledge, and its benefits outweigh the disadvantages.

TAPESCRIPT

PART 1:

Mai (serious tone of voice): Good morning, everyone. Today, Nam, Mark and I are going to talk about fake news. This is a serious issue nowadays as the Internet has become a very popular source of information for everyone around the world. In Viet Nam, there were more than 72 million Internet users in 2022. This accounted for around 75 per cent of the country's population. However, as the Internet is getting more and more popular, I'm becoming increasingly concerned about the rise of fake news published online. Because it's so easy for people to post anything they want on the Internet, false information and fake news stories are very common online. This can be harmful to young people who can be encouraged to believe in dangerous views or actions, and change their behaviour. I think we need to take action and stop the spread of fake news. Do you have anything to add, Nam?

Nam (embarrassing tone of voice): Thank you, Mai. Well, my experience with fake news on the Internet was truly embarrassing. I saw a news story about a powerful earthquake that had injured people and destroyed houses in Central Viet Nam. I immediately shared the story and all the images with my friends and family, and even started planning a charity event. Some people laughed at me, but others were upset and angry with me as they had relatives in Central Viet Nam and were really worried about them. I wish I had checked all the facts more carefully. How about you, Mark? What's your take on fake news?

Mark: Well, I don't think we can stop the spread of fake news, but we should learn to avoid it. First, make sure the websites where the news item or image is published are credible. Such websites usually belong to government organisations or universities, and are updated regularly. Second, look to see if the story appears on other news sites that you know and trust. In addition, pay attention to the language. News stories that are full of spelling and grammar errors, and show bias are very unlikely to be credible and you should avoid using or sharing them. As long as we evaluate everything we read and we're careful about what we share on social media, we can protect ourselves from fake news. So I think there's nothing to worry about.

PART 2:

Nam: Excuse me, Ms Stewart. I'd like to know more about the home robots at the New Tech Centre.

Ms Stewart: No problem, Nam. I'll introduce you to Ally. It's the most advanced home robot using artificial intelligence to perform tasks.

Nam: So what can it do?

Ms Stewart: Well, it can see, hear, speak, and even interact with you. It understands several languages and can even teach you maths and science.

Nam: Wow, that's amazing. Does it run on batteries?

Ms Stewart: No, it's eco-friendly. It uses solar energy.
